HTML element reference

This HTML reference lists all HTML elements, defined in HTML5 or in a previous specification. When enclosed within angle brackets, they form HTML tags: `<elementname>`. Elements are entities specifying how HTML documents should be built, and what kind of content should be placed in what part of an HTML document.

The symbol indicates that the element has been added in HTML5. Note that other elements listed here may have been modified or extended by the HTML5 specification. Dimmed elements are non-standard, obsolete, or deprecated; they must not be used in new Web sites, and should gradually be removed from existing ones to avoid unwanted results.

The symbol indicates that the element is defined in the Web Components collection of specifications.

CSS reference

This CSS Reference lists all standard CSS properties, pseudo-classes and pseudo-elements, @-rules, units, and selectors in alphabetic order. It allows you to quickly access detailed information for each of them. It not only lists the CSS 1 and CSS 2.1 properties, but also is a CSS3 reference that links to any CSS3 property and concept standardized, or already stabilized.

See also Mozilla CSS Extensions for Gecko-specific properties prefixed with `-moz`; and WebKit CSS Extensions for WebKit-specific properties. See Vendor-prefixed CSS Property Overview by Peter Beverloo for all prefixed properties.

Damon Rich will moderate a panel at MIT Museum on the mortgage crisis in conjunction with Red Lines, Death Vows, Foreclosures, Risk Structures. More_

"The idea of 'engineering chance encounters' is very popular today in both architecture and urban planning -- if you somehow plan people's courses so they'll bump into each other, imaginative thoughts that would not have occurred to them otherwise can and will. One thing about university life is the siloization -- like grain silos -- where everyone is so over-taxed looking after their own turf it's very hard to look across to the next silo. Universities need to build organizations that counteract the effects of siloization. And for the MIT campus, CAVS does that in a way that is efficient and wildly productive. The arts are the draw, but a very interesting cross-section of the MIT intellectual life attends those events."

"The idea of 'engineering chance encounters' is very popular today in both architecture and urban planning -- if you somehow plan people's courses so they'll bump into each other, imaginative thoughts that would not have occurred to them otherwise can and will. "The New York Times published a shocking story last week, reporting that "tens of thousands of eligible voters in at least six swing states have been removed from the rolls or have been blocked from registering in ways that appear to violate federal law."" ... "The article continued: "Although much attention this year has been focused on the millions of new voters being added to the rolls by the candidacy of Senator Barack Obama, there has been far less notice given to the number of voters being dropped from those same rolls." The paper looked at six swing states: Colorado, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Nevada and North Carolina. "Michigan and Colorado are removing voters from the rolls within 90 days of a federal election, which is not allowed except when voters die, notify the authorities that they have moved out of state, or have been declared unfit to vote. Indiana, Nevada, North Carolina and Ohio seem to be improperly using Social Security data to verify registration applications for new voters."" ... "The net effect: in Michigan 33,000 voters were removed from the rolls in August and in Colorado 37,000 voters were purged in three weeks since mid-July. Imagine this scenario--on Election Day thousands of voters will show up to the polls, only to be told they're not registered, leading to chaos and confusion, perhaps in large enough numbers to swing the results in crucial swing states." ... "It's a scary thought--and one the [2008 Election Democratic Presidential Candidate Barack] Obama campaign says they're preparing for. On a conference call today, Obama campaign manager David Plouffe and legal counsel Bob Bauer laid out their plans to ensure that every vote is counted." ... ""This has been an election of enormous interest to the American people and we think that's something that should be celebrated," Plouffe said. "Our opponents seem to have a different view."" ... "Obama counsel Bob Bauer pointed to examples in Montana, where Republicans have used change-of-address forms to improperly challenge new Democratic registrants (a federal judge called the GOP's tactics "political chicanery"); in Ohio, where Republicans challenged same-day registration and absentee voting (the 6th circuit court said the claim rested on "shaky ground"); in Michigan, where Republicans tried to use foreclosure lists to purge voters; and in Wisconsin, where the Republican Attorney General is suing the state's board of elections. Freed Prisoners Head Home, as Trump Plans to Welcome Them

By PETER BAKER and CHOE SANG-HUN 4:08 PM ET

- Three American prisoners released by North Korea were flying back to the United States, heading toward an air base where President Trump prepared to greet them.
- Their liberation removed a bitter and emotional obstacle ahead of a planned summit meeting between Mr. Trump and Kim Jong-un, the North Korean leader.

- How to use a Tampon

Why worry about your period when you have more important stuff to think about?

At Tampax we understand this and that's why our tampons are designed to suit your body and help you get on with life.

To find the right tampon for you check out our product selector and, to help you keep track of when your next period will begin we have the period calendar. And if you want to keep in the know on tampon-related issues our Q&A section is your direct link to expert advice. It's all designed to make your period the last thing on your mind.
